About the Cover

Looking commandingly over the small town of Kapaau in North Kohala is an impressive statue of one of Hawai'i's most revered leaders, Kamehameha I. The statue commemorates this leader and warrior who, in 1810, united the islands into one kingdom after decades of struggle and threats from western forces. The king is dressed in his royal attire, a bright yellow 'ahu 'ula (feather cloak) and mahiole (helmet). Rick San Nicolas describes his decade-long project to recreate seventeen cloaks and helmets of King Kamehameha I and his court based on a painting by artist Brook Kapukuniahia Parker, starting on page 52.
